Developer: Vijeo Systems Limited Developer website: Download link: A: If you're using Firefox you can use the built-in built-in Download Helper extension. If you are using Chrome, they have a built-in extension called Chrome Download Manager which you can use. If you have Mac, then just use the built-in download manager (right click on the URL and choose Copy Link Location, this will copy the link so you can paste it in the Download Helper extension. As a side note, you can also set the file extension to ZIP which will make it "zip". But now, when you click on it, you will get the option to either open it or save it. Customer Reviews I definitely recommend this box to everyone I know who wants to spice up their busy lives and experience the magic of a NEW fragrance that looks different, smells different, feels different, and of course tastes different. You don't always have to buy full bottles and make double trips to the store if you can get the same fragrance at a lower price at the container store. The price of each sample is also excellent to start trying out a fragrance for a few days. They are great for girls or guys or mix and match to try out a new fragrance you like from the box.Q: Resizing Java JFrame by dragging the corners I'm trying to make a JFrame resize when I try to move the corners, but it doesn't work. I want to make a JFrame that's maximized, but I don't want to have to change the width and height of the frame all the time. When I run the code below, the box is almost as big as the frame, it isn't resizing in either direction. I've tried changing the width and height of the frame to other values, but the box isn't changing. import javax.swing.*; public class ResizingJFrame { public static void main(String[] args) { JFrame frame = new JFrame("Resizing Frame"); frame.setDefaultCloseOperation(JFrame.EXIT_ON_CLOSE); frame.getContentPane().add(new JLabel("Hello

In order to tell the truth, I do NOT have enough knowledge to answer your question. Is it the first time you encounter it? Try to search it first. P.S. I'm very new in this website, could you please change the title of the question? Sorry for the trouble and thanks for your effort. A: The title should be in the form What is...? instead of ...? so that your question (including tags) get higher priority in the answer ordering. It seems that every time I turn around, someone (or some group of people) is busy shutting down all ports of the Internet, or at least a certain few ports of the Internet, to prevent services such as BitTorrent from functioning. These blocking efforts, more often than not, have been quite blunt and widespread. In the case of this weekend's blocking in China, however, it appears that the firewall keeps itself a bit more discrete by appearing to be selective about the ports that it blocks. According to a notice put out by the Chinese Ministry of Industry and Information Technology (MIIT) dated 19th September, the MIIT has "instructed all Internet service providers in China to refuse access to a number of websites related to pornography and various consumer information products which are characterized by obscene, pornographic, unhealthy, illegal, harmful, and violent content." As to the methods used by the Chinese Ministry of Industry and Information Technology (MIIT) to comply with this directive, the Ministry released two screenshots. The first, which is from Google's Transparency Report, shows that Google attempted to get past the Chinese Government's blocking of porn sites at the very least 94 times in July. The second screenshot, from China's Twitter-like Sina Weibo social network, shows that as of this coming Saturday, October 19th, 18 of China's biggest ISPs have been asked to block a total of 184 IP addresses. According to the notices displayed on the networking firm Sina Weibo, these 18 ISPs are mostly focused on the Lujiazui Economic and Technological Development Zone (TEDA) in Shanghai. How to bypass the blocking of ip address? There were times that many content providers and users couldn't watch or download files, movies and other video contents through websites. To make up for it, a few days ago netizens in China found
